

Three companies beat earnings this week and were sold anyway. Alphabet, Intel and Texas Instruments each cleared the bar on revenue and profit, then raised what they intend to spend — and the market marked all three down. The buyers went where the spending lands: servers, memory, power. The sellers went where the spending comes from.

▲ Ten biggest advances		29-24 JUL
01	UTZ UTZ Utz Brands	$14.06 +89.2%
TUE 21 · Taken private by Intersnack Group in a $2.9bn deal. The week's only true one-off — a closed-end event, not a trend.
02	SM SMCI Super Micro Computer	$31.20 +25.0%
TUE-WED 21 · Over $60bn of new Q4 orders, record backlog, and gross-margin guidance lifted from 8.2–8.4% to 15–17%. Plans an AI data centre with SpaceX.
03	ACHR ACHR Archer Aviation	$5.28 +22.0%
MON 20 · Defence-tech partnership; the single largest one-day move of Monday's session.
04	NB NBIS Nebius Group	$216.92 +18.9%
TUE 21 · Nvidia disclosed a 9.3% stake in the neocloud — ~22.3m shares, tracing to a $2bn March investment. Analyst targets followed.
05	MU MU Micron Technology	$913.53 +12.0%
TUE 21 · Memory melt-up: WDC and STX each rose about the same, the DRAM ETF +11%. Round-tripped by Friday — see below.
06	CB COIN Coinbase	n/a +9.6%
TUE 21 · Bitcoin hit its highest since 16 June on CLARITY Act optimism and a fifth straight day of spot-ETF inflows.
07	WULF WULF TeraWulf	$19.92 +8.0%
TUE 21 · Carried up in the same crypto-equity bid as COIN and HOOD.
08	SN NOW ServiceNow	$91.94 +7.3%
THU 23 · EPS $0.90 vs $0.85–0.86 est, subscription revenue +23%, FY guidance raised, AI ACV past $1bn. A rare beat that was actually paid for.
09	HOOD HOOD Robinhood	$106.36 +7.1%
TUE 21 · Crypto-linked bid; closed at $106.36.
10	HAS HAS Hasbro	n/a +7.0%
TUE 21 · Q2 beat on both lines, FY adjusted EBITDA guidance raised.

▼ Ten biggest declines		29-24 JUL
01	LS LESL Leslie's	$1.31 -47.0%
WED 22 · Weighing Chapter 11. About $757m of debt against $61m FY25 adjusted EBITDA — roughly 12.5× leverage. Down over 99% since its 2020 IPO.
02	AB ACI Albertsons	$11.02 -22.0%
THU 23 · EPS $0.42 vs $0.54 est and FY26 guidance cut to $1.75–1.85 from $2.22–2.32. Identical sales flipped to a decline. Losing low-income shoppers to Walmart, Amazon and Aldi.
03	PG PEGA Pegasystems	$26.24 -16.7%
WED 22 · Q2 miss, slower contract growth, and a warning that AI-driven spending delays are hitting demand. The clearest "AI eats software" print of the week.
04	RL ROL Rollins	n/a -14.7%
WED 22 · EPS $0.32 on $1.08bn, both light, and the FY organic growth outlook cut on weaker residential demand — despite a 99th straight quarter of revenue growth.
05	TS TSLA Tesla	$313.03 -14.5%
THU 23 · Worst earnings-reaction day on record. Record $28.2bn revenue and 480,126 deliveries, but operating income fell 57%, margin hit 1.4%, FCF turned negative and capex heads past $25bn. Down ~19% on the week.
06	SD SNDK SanDisk	$1,436.56 -11.0%
FRI 24 · Memory supply-glut fears as Samsung and SK Hynix add capacity. Still up ~526% YTD — this reads as profit-taking, not a broken thesis.
07	ML MOH Molina Healthcare	n/a -9.2%
THU 23 · Beat on EPS at $1.51 but sold on falling membership and lower premium revenue. Health care is the only S&P sector shrinking this quarter.
08	WDC WDC Western Digital	$558.30 -9.0%
FRI 24 · Same memory unwind; SK Hynix and Micron fell 6–8% alongside. Both ends of the round trip inside four sessions.
09	INTC INTC Intel	$92.32 -8.0%
FRI 24 · Revenue $16.1bn (+25%, fastest in 15 years), EPS $0.42 versus $0.21 est, data-centre and AI +59%. Popped 13% after hours, then gave it all back once capex above $20bn landed.
10	GOOGL GOOGL Alphabet	≈ $318 -7.1%
THU 23 · Worst earnings reaction since Feb 2025. Revenue $119.8bn (+24%), Cloud +82%, 12th straight double-digit quarter — erased by FY capex guided to $195–205bn and a warning that 2027 goes higher still.

JUST MISSED
GEV –7% (beat and raised, sold anyway) · RHI –6% · TXN –5.3% (double beat, priced for more) · SPXC –5.3% to a record low · CAVA –5% · AMZN –4%, MSFT –2% (Thu)

One name, both lists
Micron and Western Digital appear on opposite boards in the same week. Both rose about 12% on Tuesday as memory pricing ran, then fell 6–9% on Friday when Samsung and SK Hynix capacity additions revived glut fears. That round trip — not the Tesla headline — is the week's cleanest read on how thin the AI-hardware bid actually is: it is a positioning trade, and it unwinds in a session.

Backdrop

what set the tone

THE CAPEX VERDICT
Alphabet lifted FY26 capex to $195–205bn (Q2 alone $44.9bn, +101% y/y). Intel went past $20bn. Tesla past $25bn. All three beat; all three fell. Hyperscaler capex is tracking above $500bn for 2026.

OIL AND THE GULF
Brent settled above $100 Thursday, +7% and the highest since 22 May, after Houthi strikes on two Saudi tankers, then slid to about $95 Friday on tank hopes. Those hopes faded over the weekend: Iran rejected ceasefire talks and Trump signalled further strikes. Week's up ~30% this month and reopens as the crude's live risk.

RATES ARE THE OTHER TAX
The 10-year sits at 4.67%, touching ~4.70% — the highest since January 2025. Funds rate 3.50–3.75%, with 2026 inflation projections revised up to 3.6% and Waller flagging risk tilted toward inflation.

EARNINGS, FLATTERED
Q2 blended S&P growth jumped to 37.9% from 24.8% a year earlier — but Alphabet's GAAP figure carried a $98bn one-off gain. Strip it out and the number is 25.9%. Ten of eleven sectors are growing; health care is the exception.

UNDER THE SURFACE
Tech fell 2.37% Friday while real estate, financials, materials, health care and staples rose — 17 S&P names hit 52-week highs, led by JPMorgan. Communication services and consumer discretionary each shed roughly 6% on the week.

THIS WEEK DECIDES IT
Two days out: FOMC Tue–Wed 28–29 Jul, no dot plot, Chair Warsh at 2:30pm ET — a hold is expected but markets price roughly 35% odds of a hike. Then Microsoft, Meta, Amazon, Apple and Qualcomm all report into the same capex question that sank Alphabet.

WHERE IT STANDS SUNDAY

A quiet, fearful weekend. Total cap around $2.2tn, up 0.65% on the day but down 1.1% from Friday, with Fear & Greed stuck at 27. Bitcoin is range-bound under $64k and Sunday's close is the level traders are watching — reclaiming $65k opens $68k, losing $62.5k opens $60k. Altcoins shed $8.3bn on the week; the exception was DeXe, up 90% to $88 on Saturday.

REDDIT — HELD SEPARATE

This block is deliberately walled off from everything that is chatter volume and vendor-computed sentiment, not price or fundamental data, and it is not a source for any figure on the boards. Mention counts come from third-party scrapers polling r/wallstreetbets on short intervals, so rankings shift intraday and no two vendors agree exactly. Read it as a crowding indicator only. The percentages below are change in mention volume over 24 hours, not share of conversation, and the vendors sample different platforms — r/wallstreetbets, X, StockTwits, 4chan — so the two boards are not strictly like for like.

GOOG · NVDA · AMD

HIGHEST ABSOLUTE VOLUME — A DIFFERENT MEASURE

GOOG · NVDA · AMD were the most-mentioned names outright on 24 July, while INTC, TSLA, GOOGL, IBM and NOW were the five most discussed across the full week on r/wallstreetbets and X. Spike rank and volume rank are not the same thing: a name can top the spike list from a very low base, as Copart does here.

Worth noting: the four names retail talked about most — INTC, TSLA, GOOGL, IBM — include three of the ten biggest decliners. Attention concentrated almost entirely on what was falling, and none of the week's actual top advances (UTZ, SMCI, ACHR, NBIS) registered in the top five by mention volume.

How to read this.

The headline percentage on each mover row is the single-session reaction to the catalyst named in each row, not full week-over-week returns, because that is how the underlying coverage reports them; the date chip on each row tells you which session. Where a figure was quoted intraday, after hours and at the close, the close is used and the others noted. A few percentages differ by one to two points between outlets covering the same move (SMCI was reported at +13%, +15%, +18% and +25% across venues and sessions) — the most widely corroborated figure is shown. Bars are scaled to a shared 0–90% range across both boards, so the two sides are directly comparable. Green and red never carry meaning alone: every value keeps its sign and every row sits in a labelled board. Compiled Saturday 25 July and updated Sunday 26 July 2026 from the sources below; nothing here is investment advice.

Data notes — crypto and social buzz

Crypto figures are snapshots from published market reports, not an exchange feed. The board carries a mix of as-of times and each row states its own: Bitcoin, XRP and Solana are Sunday 26 July, the rest are the Friday 24 July close because no weekend print was published for them.

Prices for the same coin varied slightly between outlets and the most widely corroborated value is shown; SOL appears at $75.09 and $75.42 across sources, and its daily fall as both 2.83% and 3.8%. Weekly moves are only shown where a source stated one — four of the nine carry n/a rather than an inferred figure, and the tenth constituent is left open because no source in reach ranked it.

Social buzz is chatter volume, not price or fundamental data, and is never a source for any figure on the equity or crypto boards. Each percentage is the change in mention volume over 24 hours as computed by the third-party scraper. Vendors poll different platforms on 5–15 minute intervals, so ranks shift intraday and no two agree exactly; the INTC range is two snapshots of the same day. A spike is measured against that name's own recent baseline, so a low-volume ticker can post a very large percentage — Copart's +1,167% is the clearest example, and it did not move on the tape.

Equity mover percentages above are single-session reactions to the catalyst named in each row, separately sourced, and unaffected by either of the above.
